

Malaria Cup

Tuesday, 21 March 2006

The Malaria Cup is a competition for colleges and universities to see which can organize the most people to shoot a basketball shot in order to raise awareness of malaria. Show that your school cares about fighting malaria by getting involved in the fight!

The rules of the contest are simple:

- Each university can register by sending an email to vs.malaria@gmail.com
- Shots can be taken any time between now and African Malaria Day, April 25, 2006
- The only shots that will be credited to a school are those that are photographed, recorded by video or witnessed by two members of the university's administration.
- The competition is opened to any university, anywhere in the world.
- Shooters do not have to be students of the university.

The following schools are currently entered in the malaria cup event:

- Emory University - Atlanta, Ga.
- Princeton University - Princeton, NJ
- Yale University - New Haven CT.
- Ben Gurion University - Israel
- University of California, Irvine - California
- Vanderbilt University - Nashville, Tennessee
- Aligarh Muslim University - Aligarh, India

Does your school care enough to get involved? If so please email us at vs.malaria@gmail.com to arrange your school's participation
